The All India Political Parties Meet is a forum for discussion and deliberation that is being called before the session of the parliament takes place. Here delegates delve into the nuances and intricacies of modern-day Indian politics with its caveats.

With members from both houses of the parliament present, the AIPPM strives to encourage deliberation on discourses surrounding socio-economic and geopolitical issues.

In the midst of the intense debate and resolution-making at a typical MUN conference, the International Press Corps gives a unique perspective to the world of diplomacy.

Unlike the usual committees made up of delegates who represent countries, IPC comprises a team of journalists who are each assigned a well-known news agency.

IPC delegates are required to not only report on the committee proceedings but also analyze the debate that takes place.
